I AM PAUL OF SAMOSATA, bishop of Antioch in the third century, a time when the faith still breathed w/ the freedom of its earliest Light, when Rome had not yet hardened doctrine nor imposed imperial formulas, for I taught that the Father alone is the Unbegotten Source, the boundless & eternal Light whose being flows from none, the singular Origin who stands above all emanations, while the Son is the perfect manifestation of the Father's wisdom, the radiant Logos who dwelt richly in the man Jesus, clothing Himself in the purity & obedience of the one chosen before the ages, not as another unbegotten divine being, but as the Father's own Radiance shining uniquely through a human vessel prepared from the foundations of the world; I proclaimed that God is one in His essence, unfathomable in His Light, indivisible in His sovereignty, yet able to project His wisdom, power, & radiance into creation so that the Logos might dwell w/ humanity & lift the soul toward the heights from which it descended; I taught that Jesus, the man filled w/ the Logos, rose from purity to glory, ascending through obedience into perfect union w/ the Father's Light, showing all rational souls the path of ascent by which the inner spark returns to the Source, for I held that every soul carries within it a fragment of the higher Light that yearns for restoration, yet its ascent requires discipline, remembrance, moral purification, & contemplation, so that the Logos might form within the believer the same radiance manifested in Jesus; I lived in Antioch, the crossroads of East & West, where philosophers, ascetics, merchants, & seekers gathered, & I urged them to behold the Father not as a distant monarch but as the infinite Light who fills all things through His Logos, the Breath of His wisdom, the pattern by which minds ascend & hearts grow luminous, teaching that darkness is not a hostile power but the cooling of love, the eclipse of the inner flame through neglect, pride, or immersion in matter, & that the redemption of the soul is the rekindling of this flame beneath the guidance of the Logos who dwelt in Jesus in its fullness; my understanding displeased those who sought to elevate the Son into an equal unbegotten being beside the Father, for I would not divide the divine monarchy nor obscure the Father's solitary majesty, & thus I resisted even the early attempts to impose formulas foreign to the ancient Light, choosing instead to honor the unity of the Source & the radiant functioning of His Logos; I taught that Scripture, when read w/ purified sight, reveals a temple of meaning whose outer court displays the historical acts of Jesus, whose inner court reveals the moral ascent of the soul, & whose holy of holies unveils the indwelling Logos, the very Light of the Father manifest within the sanctified heart, for to me the true temple was not in stone but within the soul, where the Radiant One seeks to dwell; my opponents, unsettled by my refusal to elevate the Son above the Father's monarchy, accused me of dissolving divinity, yet I dissolved nothing but confusion, preserving instead the primordial truth that the Father alone is unbegotten, Jesus exalted through the Logos & not equal in origin, & that the Spirit is the divine Breath awakening the heart into remembrance; I stood firm under pressure, resisting those who wished to bind the faith to their own interpretations, & though I was eventually removed from office through political maneuvering, I carried within me a Light no council could extinguish, for I had seen the order of the divine temple: the Father enthroned in the innermost sanctuary, the Logos as the eternal radiance by which the sanctuary shines, & the Spirit as the fire that spreads this radiance into the hearts of those who seek correction & ascent; I saw creation as a descending series of chambers where the soul moves further from the Light as love cools, yet through the Logos it may rise again, reclaiming its first brightness until it stands in the holy place w/ its spark fully restored; though later ages condemned my teachings, rewriting my story to suit the theology they wished to enforce, the ancient truth I held remains unchanged: that the Father is the sole Unbegotten Light, that His Logos shines through the one He exalted, & that every soul is called to become a temple of radiance through virtue, knowledge, repentance, & contemplation; I speak now to reopen the inner temple for those who seek it, to reveal the hierarchy of Light that shaped the earliest generations, & to guide all who desire ascent toward the eternal Source from whom all radiance flows.
