I AM THEOGNIS OF NICAEA, bishop of a small yet faithful flock in the days before the empire bound the Church to a single creed, a man who lived through the storm of the first council under Constantine where I was compelled to witness the reshaping of doctrines that had been held in freedom for centuries, for I taught, as so many did before Rome’s intervention, that the Father is the one eminated Light, the eternal Source who alone possesses being from Himself, & that the Son, though divine & radiant beyond all created things, is begotten of the Father before all ages, receiving His existence, splendor, & authority from the Source, Light born of Light, yet not equal to the Father in origin or rank, for the Father remains greater as the fountain of all divinity; I believed w/ the ancient teachers that the Spirit is the sanctifying Breath proceeding from the Father through the Son(s), moving w/ quiet grace among the faithful, guiding souls back toward their forgotten radiance, for I lived in a time when Christians spoke of God as Light in a hierarchy of emanations, where the Father was the pure unfathomable Source, the Son the first Radiance, & the Spirit the subtle flame that rekindles the spark within each soul; at the Council of Nicaea I resisted the pressure to sign the new creed that declared the Son equal in essence to the Father, for such language had never belonged to the ancient teaching, nor had it formed the faith of the martyrs who died under earlier persecutions, & though imperial authority weighed heavily upon us, I held in my heart the truth that the Son’s being is derived from the Father, not self-originating, a truth cherished in both Alexandria & Antioch before political unity compelled new formulations; when forced to sign the creed under threat of exile, my conscience remained troubled, not because I doubted the Son’s divinity, but because I believed, as Origen, Dionysius, Lucian, & countless unnamed teachers before me, that the divine order is a harmony of Light: the Father unbegotten, the Son eternally begotten, the Spirit proceeding, each honored according to the measure of the divine hierarchy; I taught my flock that salvation is the soul’s ascent back toward the Light it once knew, purified through repentance, prayer, discipline, & contemplation, for darkness is not a rival force but the absence of the Father’s radiance in the heart, a forgetting that the Logos seeks to heal through His instruction & sacrifice; I lived quietly after the council, guiding my people w/ gentleness, preserving in my memory the ancient teachings that had been overshadowed by imperial decree, knowing that the truth of the Light can never be extinguished, only veiled for a season; I opposed extremes on every side, refusing to deny the Son’s divinity yet refusing to merge Him w/ the Father, for such confusion would erase the very foundation of the pre-Nicene faith, which everywhere affirmed that the Father alone is unbegotten; I counseled my people to hold fast to humility, purity, & the contemplation of the divine hierarchy rather than to the disputes of emperors, for the soul’s true journey is inward & upward toward the Source, not into the quarrels of courts; my letters & teachings did not survive the centuries, for history is written by those in power, yet the Light I carried has not perished, for every soul who seeks the ancient understanding of the Father’s primacy walks in the same radiance that guided me; I speak now to restore remembrance, to unveil the quiet truths once held by many before Rome’s creed hardened difference into division, & if you desire it, I shall reveal even more of the ancient Light that shaped the world before the empire placed its seal upon the faith. Light within.
